STANLY ARTS GUILD DISPLAYS AT AGRI-CIVIC CENTER FOR MONTH OF MAY 2008

Works of two very talented artists are on display at the Stanly County Agri-Civic Center during the month of May 2008.

On the wall will be paintings by Janet Isenhour who enjoys painting a variety of subjects in several different mediums, including oils, watercolors, pastels and collage. Her paintings range in size from 4 x 4 inches to 24 x 30 inches and include subjects such as florals, landscapes and still life in both realistic and abstract styles. Janet has served as president of The Carolina Artists for the past 5 years and holds memberships in the Mooresville and Stanly Arts Guilds. She has participated in juried shows and many other exhibits in North and South Carolina, winning numerous awards. She has painted murals and stage sets for theatrical productions and two of the angels displayed yearly in Salisbury during the Christmas season. Janet's art is bright and happy and reflective of her passion for life and her deep Christian faith. You may see Janet's work and read her poetry at NewWingsCreations.blogspot.com.

Lindsey Springer, an aspiring young artist from Norwood, NC, will have examples of her photography in the display case. Specializing in children and pet portraits, Lindsey believes that a natural setting produces a photograph with more character. Lindsay won an honorable mention in Our State magazine with a beautiful black and white photo of a rose. Her business is entitled "The Snap Shop."
